Packing and Shipping:

Packaging and Shipping for Food Storage Tins

Food storage tins should be packaged in a sturdy cardboard box with enough cushioning material to protect the tins from being damaged during shipping.

The box should then be securely sealed with tape and a shipping label should be applied. The label should include the destination address, the return address, and the shipping carrier's tracking number. Once the package is ready to ship, it should be sent via a reliable shipping carrier. Depending on the destination, the shipping carrier will be able to provide estimated delivery times. All packages should be tracked and monitored to ensure they arrive at their destination on time.
